El Consejo de Seguridad aprueba la Resolución 2100/2013 para la estabilización de Mali

El 25 de marzo, las autoridades de Transición de Mali solicitaron a la Secretaría General de Naciones Unidas el despliegue de una operación de la organización internacional, para estabilizar y restaurar la autoridad y la soberanía en todo el territorio maliense. Un mes después, tal y como estaba previsto, el Consejo de Seguridad ha aprobado por unanimidad su Resolución 2100/2013, al amparo del Capítulo VII de la Carta de Naciones Unidas, que autoriza el despliegue de la Misión Multidimensional e Integrada de Estabilización de Naciones Unidas para Mali (MINUSMA, por sus siglas en inglés), así como el apoyo decidido y global al proceso político y a la asistencia humanitaria en este país africano.

En la reunión del Consejo de Seguridad, celebrada el 25 de abril, los quince países miembros debatieron la propuesta de la nueva Resolución, que fue presentada por Francia y respaldada por Estados Unidos, Reino Unido, Marruecos, Ruanda, Togo, Australia, Corea del Sur y Luxemburgo. Esta propuesta respondía, en gran medida, a las opciones presentadas por el secretario general Ban Ki Moon en su informe del pasado 26 de marzo. A este respecto, gran parte de la Comunidad Internacional – especialmente dentro de África– defendían la segunda opción, que contemplaba el despliegue de una fuerza de estabilización junto a una fuerza paralela responsable de la lucha contra el terrorismo remanente en el norte del país. Finalmente, esta opción ha sido, con importantes matices, la base de la nueva Resolución 2100, que, en sí misma, significa un importante giro doctrinal respecto a los principios de las operaciones de paz de Naciones Unidas, al asumir un mandato más ofensivo contra los grupos terroristas yihadistas¹.

En la reunión, y consciente de la trascendencia de la nueva misión de Naciones Unidas en Mali, el embajador de Rusia ante Naciones Unidas, Vitaly Churkin, manifestó su preocupación por la deriva ofensiva de esta operación, y subrayó que la fuerza de MINUSMA debería centrarse, fundamentalmente, en apoyar el proceso político nacional para restaurar la democracia en el país. Por su parte, el ministro interino de Asuntos Exteriores de Mali, Tiéman Coulibaly, agradeció la adopción de esta resolución y, con ella, el relevo de la fuerza AFISMA por una misión dirigida y liderada directamente por Naciones Unidas. En su intervención, destacó el interés del Gobierno de Transición en llevar adelante el proceso político, e impulsar la reconciliación nacional con todos los grupos que renuncien a la lucha armada y respalden la integridad y unidad de todo el país.

RESOLUCIÓN 2100/2013: CONDICIONES, CIFRAS Y PRINCIPALES COMETIDOS

La Misión Multidimensional Integrada de Estabilización de la ONU en Mali (MINUSMA), con un mandato inicial de un año, desplegará hasta 11.200 efectivos, incluidos en este número máximo los batallones de reserva que pueden desplegar en el país africano cuando sean requeridos. Junto a los militares, 1.440 policías serán garantes también de la seguridad y de sus misiones específicas en el mantenimiento del orden público. En cuanto al momento exacto de despliegue, la Resolución establece que estará condicionado a los niveles de seguridad en el terreno, algo que, en sí mismo, constituye una destacada singularidad del acuerdo alcanzado en el Consejo de Seguridad para estabilizar Mali. Así, 60 días antes de la fecha prevista para el lanzamiento de la operación –el 1 de julio de 2013–, el Consejo determinará, de forma definitiva, si la región septentrional del país reúne las condiciones mínimas para desplegar esta operación de paz de Naciones Unidas Además de la fuerza de estabilización, el otro asunto destacado de la Resolución es la autorización expresa para que Francia continúe en el terreno “dentro de su área de despliegue y con todos los medios a su alcance”, pero con el cometido de intervenir en apoyo a MINUSMA “cuando esté bajo inminente y grave amenaza”. A pesar de que, desde el 11 de enero, la misión del contingente francés en Mali, es clara: luchar contra los grupos terroristas; la Resolución no le asigna específicamente este cometido, y subraya que su actuación será a requerimiento del Secretario General.

En cuanto a los cometidos específicos de las fuerzas de MINUSMA, que incluirán a la mayor parte de los contingentes de AFISMA, la Resolución los agrupa dentro de los siguientes objetivos principales:

- Estabilizar las poblaciones claves y apoyar el restablecimiento de la autoridad estatal en todo su territorio de soberanía.

- Colaborar en la implementación de la hoja de ruta para la transición política, que incluye la celebración de la convocatoria electoral (la propia Resolución confirma que será el 7 de julio) y el desarrollo de un proceso de reconciliación nacional
- Proteger y promover los derechos humanos, que serán estrechamente vigilados por observadores de Naciones Unidas, así como proteger a los civiles y el personal de Naciones Unidas
- Apoyar la asistencia humanitaria, la preservación del patrimonio cultural y el imperio de la ley.

Por último, y entre otros muchos aspectos, la Resolución reitera la importancia de la reforma del sector de seguridad en Mali, y especialmente el adiestramiento, la consolidación y el redespliegue de las fuerzas de seguridad nacionales en todo el territorio. Por este motivo, el Consejo de Seguridad hace un reconocimiento expreso a la misión de la Unión Europea, EUTM Mali, que está contribuyendo en todos estos ámbitos, además de reforzar el control de las fuerzas militares por parte de la autoridad civil.

La Resolución 2100/2103 supone un importante punto de inflexión en la intervención internacional, solicitada por Mali, la CEDEAO y la Unión Africana, para afrontar con determinación la estabilización y pacificación de este país africano. Aunque los niveles de seguridad, así como otros factores de planeamiento, condicionan hoy el despliegue definitivo de la operación; sin duda, esta nueva Resolución supone un paso decidido de la Comunidad Internacional para adaptarse a las actuales condiciones políticas y estratégicas del país y de la región.
